

What We're Really Talking About

When We're Talking About Universal Design for Learning

By Beth Stark

Educator and Consultant · Inclusive Learning Systems · UDL · Accessibility

About This Resource

The poster has a yellow border and five boxes in pink, green, yellow, blue and purple. Each box has a heading and a picture. The pictures show a crowd of people of different ages, cultures and abilities, two hands holding up a person reading, five figures in a circle, a thumbs up with stars, and a Plan, Do, Check, Action cycle.

This poster names five things we mean when we talk about Universal Design for Learning.

Text Version

What We're Really Talking About When We're Talking About Universal Design for Learning:

1. Creating the Conditions for Belonging

Picture: a crowd of people of different ages, cultures and abilities, including a person using a wheelchair.

2. Believing In, and Empowering, Every Learner

Picture: two hands holding up a person reading a book.

3. Embracing Variability

Picture: five figures in different colours, arms joined in a circle.

4. Understanding that Barriers Exist in the Design of Learning Experiences and the Environment, Not the Learner

Picture: a thumbs up with stars around it.

5. Engaging in the Iterative Design Process

Picture: a cycle of four arrows labelled Plan, Do, Check and Action.

About the Poster

This resource was created by Beth Stark, Inclusive Learning Systems. Licensed under CC BY-NC 4.0 \(https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by-nc/4.0/\).